Removal of approximately 1,000 railroad ties that are embedded in the mud flats of the Croton Bay. Removal will be undertaken with the use of small, flat-bottomed boats used to transport removal crews to the ties so that they can be lifted and transported to shore. Boats would be tethered so that they could be pulled into the bay by a shore crew rather than paddling or pushing against the bottom of the bay as a means of propulsion. Plywood and wood planks would be used to construct temporary work platforms.

The project area is brackish tidal mudflats in the lower intertidal zone. Nearby are shallow tidal channels and and common reed dominated tidal marsh. The sediments are soft.
